Mary, Sally and inspired design

Mary, Queen of Scots is the country’s most controversial and endlessly fascinating monarch. She has been the subject of passionate debate for nearly 500 years. The latest in a line of films focusing on Mary was recently released. And we provided fascinating insight into her life and times with our ‘pop-up’ exhibition in February. In fact, we are happy to prolong ‘Mary mania’ in a special feature running from pages 19–23.

Another remarkable woman is our own Sally Harrower. She first visited the Library in 1966 and began working here in 1982. After 37 years she is about to retire as Modern Literary Manuscripts Curator. On pages 9–11 she tells us all about her National Library life.

Celebrating creativity is one of the Library’s primary purposes. In autumn 2018 we held a competition called Re-Fashioned for design students. It was a terrific success and you can see Bryan McLyasgh’s winning creation, inspired by medieval Irish manuscripts, on page 14.

Every visitor to our George IV Bridge main library will come face-to-face with another superlative piece of design – the magnificent, imposing window that dominates our main staircase. It’s a fixture with a fascinating backstory and, as you can discover on pages 24–26, its carefully designed panels even hide tales of witchcraft and philanthropy.

Rest assured, there is much more in this latest edition of our magazine. As the staircase window helps illuminate our well-loved building, so Discover sheds new light on some of our recent activities.

COVER IMAGE: A coloured lithograph from a Mary, Queen of Scots themed masked ball held in France in the 1820s. Produced in 1829, the collection depicts Mary Stuart (pictured), Mary of Guise, the Dauphin François (husband of Mary) and others. Held at the National Library of Scotland.
YOU MADE IT HAPPEN!

Our 2018 Appeal to conserve and digitise the iconic Encyclopaedia Britannica received generous support from around the world. Donations were received from as far away as Canada, Australia and Singapore as well as from across Scotland, revealing the special place Britannica holds in the memories of all those who discovered the world and their love of knowledge between its pages.

Our first edition was published online in December to celebrate Britannica’s 250th anniversary, available for all to enjoy for free.

Flicking through its virtual pages gives a fascinating insight into the knowledge and mores of the time. For example, five categories of human are cited including ‘monstrous’, the solar system is composed of only six known planets, and freshly cut onions are said to be a cure for baldness.

Robert Bell’s beautiful illustrations depict everything from flora, fauna and medical procedures to astronomical charts and feats of engineering.

Furthering the ambitions of its Edinburgh creators in 1768 to disseminate knowledge as widely as possible, we are working to digitise and publish online all of the early editions we hold at the Library.

Your donations have also helped us develop digital learning resources and educational activities about Britannica and its place in the Scottish Enlightenment.

Our forthcoming exhibition on the Enlightenment (opening in June) will feature the first edition of Britannica as one of its star items.

Rural estate maps are often the earliest detailed depiction of the landscape for many parts of rural Scotland, but most of them are not available online. This is partly because they are scattered in many locations – often in private hands – and due to their age, size and fragility, the maps are often difficult to handle and scan.

We are therefore very excited to report on a recent estate map-scanning project from Lovat Estates Office in Beauly. The office received numerous requests for access to the maps which they couldn’t accommodate, and it was felt that digitisation would allow the best long-term access arrangements. The project involved hiring a large A0-sized flatbed scanner to enable a team of volunteers to scan the estate’s entire map archive.

The Lovat Estate maps cover a wide geographic area in the parishes of Kirkhill, Kilmorack, Kiltarlity, and Urquhart and Glenmoriston, west of Inverness, and range from the mid-18th century to the mid-20th century. Surveying often went hand-in-hand with agricultural improvement and the wider transformation of rural society. Estate maps such as these are uniquely important today for the insights they provide into this era of profound cultural change in Highland society.

We are deeply grateful to Roland Spencer-Jones (Beauly) for coordinating the whole project, to Lovat Highland Estates Ltd for their support, and to all the volunteers who contributed to making this possible.
